

Priscilla and Aquila were believers in Jesus who lived in Rome. They were expelled from Rome by the emperor who didn't like Jews. When they arrived in Corinth, they met the missionary Paul, who was a tentmaker like themselves. They lived and worked together, and they were a part of Paul's ministry to the Corinthians. Paul stayed there awhile, and many people believed in Jesus there. After 3 years Paul and his friends left. He stopped off at Ephesus and left Priscilla and Aquila there. Some time later, a man named Apollos came to Ephesus. He began preaching about Jesus, but Priscilla and Aquila were surprised, because he only knew about John's baptism. So one day they invited him to their home, and they explained the way of Jesus more fully. Apollos grew in his knowledge, and he went to Corinth to teach others the way. But Priscilla and Aquila stayed on in Ephesus, and they even had church in their house. They continued their friendship with Paul, and even saved Paul's life once! Later Paul thanked God for the work and friendship of Priscilla and Aquila. (Acts 18, 2 Tim. 4:19, 1 Corinthians 16:19, Romans 16:3)
